

For Youngman's Companion,
 A New Copy-Book

Containing Examples of y<sup>e</sup> usual hands now practised in England; very usefull for all Learners, especially such as want the Assistance of able Masters. By William Elder.

Sold by Rob. Vincent in Cliffords Inn lane, & Chr. Coningsby at y<sup>e</sup> Golden Turke's head in Fleet Street.

To my honoured Friend
 Dr John Crichton
 Physician in London

This being the first of my Performances since yo<sup>r</sup> late admirable Cure of the Dropsie wrought on me, I thought my self obliged in duty to present it to you, who (under God) did give life to doe the Same. For when all other means fail'd yo<sup>r</sup> powerfull wonder-working Medicines did in seven days time restore me from the Shape of a Monster to that of a Man. Hoping you will accept of this as a gratefull tho' very mean acknowledgm<sup>t</sup> of yo<sup>r</sup> many favours confer'd on me, is the whole aim of

Your most humble & obliged Servant
 W. L. ELDER.

Many there be who as far as words come seem to be honest men, but in their Actions most commonly prove but errant Knaves; Therefore be intimate w.th few, but courteous to all.

5
It is not enough that we obey the easy Commands, of the Almighty God, unless we obey the hard, ones too, nor that we doe obey him in some things, unless we make it our endeavour to obey him in all things.

A Mercenary obeys the Commands of God for gain, he that is religious for Conscience, a Slave for fear, a Son for Love.

Many a man is accused of crimes, who yet in those things whereof he is so accused may be innocent and without fault: for Innocency doth not alwayes secure a man from reproach and calumny. ambmem.

You may easily know one man from another but cannot so easily know a wise man from a fool, for some that seem fools are wise, and some that are accounted, and seem wise are fools. Will: Elder scripsit & calpsit 1697.

A man that in Conscience obeyo the commandes of God will readily obey the commandes of his Prince: But he will not much obey either, who much obeyo his own Lusts and Affections.

It is not so happy a thing as some men may imagine to overflow with pleasures in this world, for there is a future world denominated against all them that laugh now. and

Not he that flows with wealth is always the happiest man. For riches have many troubles attending on them but he that hath a mind contented with his Estate is truly happy.
